Thank You to All the Amazing Dads!

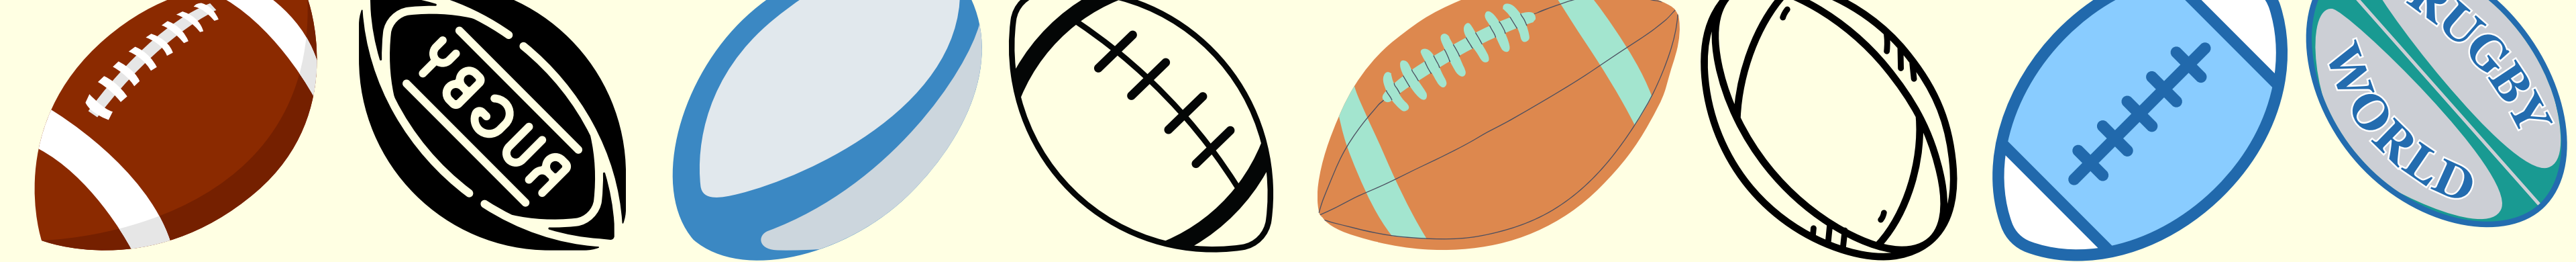

This Father's Day, we want to give a big shoutout to all the incredible fathers, grandfathers, and father figures in our community. Your love, support, and dedication mean the world — today and every day!

We hope you're being truly spoilt (you deserve it!), especially with the special keychain sold at school. A small token of appreciation for the big role you play in our lives.

ELMIE OF THE MONTH

The background of the entire slide is a light yellow color, decorated with a repeating pattern of black line-art illustrations of various video game controllers and consoles. These include handheld consoles, arcade sticks, and different styles of gamepads, some with buttons and joysticks clearly visible. The illustrations are scattered across the entire background, framing the central text area.

Guess Who?

He is widely credited as the "Father of Video Games" for his pivotal role in developing the first video game system in the 1960s, according to BAE Systems and the National Inventors Hall of Fame®. He created the "Brown Box," a prototype for the first multiplayer, multiprogram video game system, and later developed the Magnavox Odyssey, the first home video game console. While there were earlier experiments with electronic games, Baer's work was instrumental in making interactive video games accessible to the masses and shaping the modern video game industry

Learner who guesses correctly on Tuesday Morning will win a sweet treat.
There will be a winner in the junior and senior phase.

Play is more than just fun – it's how children learn, grow, and make sense of the world. Through play, they build social skills, spark creativity, develop problem-solving abilities, and gain confidence. It's the foundation of healthy development – emotionally, physically, and mentally. Let them play – it's serious learning in disguise!
